Good news if you've wondered what your great-great-grandmother looked like when pulling a frown, or how much cheerier Victorian-era photos would look if their subjects actually cracked a smile every now and then. A new deepfake tool from ancestry site MyHeritage, aptly called Deep Nostalgia, is here to satisfy your creepy needs – and of course the internet lapped it up something rotten over the weekend.

uploaded. That the service is absolutely free provides great marketing for MyHeritage, although for any photographic creatives out there you'd probably be better off with our guide to the best photo-editing software currently out there.

As you can see, netizens have used the Deep Nostalgia tool (which you can use here) to create GIF-like work encompassing legends of history, famous artworks, and absurdly creepy faces from the meme-o-sphere. Speaking of creepy, looking at these photos might remind Ghostbusters fans of the terrifying Gozer painting from Ghostbusters II. Ooh, shiver.

If you're more creeped out by privacy issues, then rest assured that MyHeritage will automatically delete any photos you upload. The maximum you can upload with the Deep Nostalgia tool is five, and note that it only works with faces, meaning you won't be able to make Bernie Sanders do the Floss or whatever.
